How the Walkers turned their spare space into a monthly income

"THE HOUSE OF VACANT ROOMS" that's what Mrs. Walker used to call the big old family home. Helen's room was left vacant when she married two years ago. Johnny's room had been empty since the day he joined the Navy. And, of course, the rumpus room was just collecting dust.

IT WAS A PROBLEM, this big house. Mrs. Walker wasn't getting any younger. Naturally, she was finding it harder every day to keep all those rooms looking neat and clean—especially those empty rooms. As it was, the Walkers were finding it difficult to make ends meet, so getting help was out of the question.

THEN ONE EVENING the Carsons dropped in. Talk about the war brought up the question of housing, and Mrs. Carson proudly announced that she had, that very day, rented part of their home to a war worker's family. "The War Housing Center arranged the whole thing," said Mrs. Carson.

THE WALKERS TOOK THE TIP. And the next morning Mrs. Walker phoned the War Housing Center. One case in particular caught her interest—that of Mr. Barton who was going to quit his war job unless he could find some place where he, his wife and child, could live together.

THE WAR HOUSING CENTER ARRANGED FOR THE BARTONS to visit the Walkers, and the two families hit it off perfectly right from the start. In no time at all Mr. and Mrs. Walker had made complete arrangements for sharing their home. And the next day the Bartons moved in.

EVERYBODY'S HAPPY NOW—Mr. and Mrs. Barton have one bedroom. Their little son, Jackie, has the other bedroom, and what used to be the rumpus room is now their own private living room. Mrs. Barton helps Mrs. Walker with the general housework. And the two families have become fast friends.

"WE ARE SHARING OUR HOME with a war worker's family" is what is printed on the window certificate awarded to the Walkers. And proud they can be. For in solving their own problem of spare space, they also helped Uncle Sam to solve a serious war housing problem in this area.
